Student Forum has been created to give all students working toward completion of a degree in Speech Language Pathology and Audiology an opportunity to voice concerns, express opinions, make observations and share new interests and ideas with your fellow students and future colleagues.

- Did you know that there are only 100 students attending Canadian programs leading to degrees in Speech Language Pathology and Audiology?
- Do you have concerns about employment opportunities?
- What do you think about a 3-year program leading to a Master’s degree?
- Are you interested in private practice?
- What does National Certification mean to you?

Participating in a network has advantages and benefits. Firstly, you, the student will be introduced to others who share an understanding of the demands and pressures of being a student. Discussion of issues that concern you may provide unexpected support at crucial times. Secondly, active involvement in a network will be a positive aspect of your learning experience. Sharing opinions and asking questions can be the spark leading to changes and improvements. We will endeavor to get responses to your questions from relevant members of our professions. Of course, exchanging information about particular areas of interest, is another way to promote collaboration in clinical and research endeavors. Contacts with your contemporaries now, may lead to important opportunities in the future.

Submissions from students in the following areas would be welcome:
- letters to the editor
- commentaries on a professional issue
- reports from the university scene
- short articles or essays

As a first step each university program is being asked to appoint a correspondent to write a brief report expressing interests or concerns about speech language pathology and audiology in their respective parts of the country. These reports will be published in the subsequent issues of Human Communication Canada.

This issue includes an invited article the paper written by Janet Reynolds, which won the first CSHA Annual Student Paper Award in 1984.

Let’s hear from you.

Address submissions for Student Forum to:
